From the Arab Street to Wall Street: Communications in the Age of Dialogue

- In the wake of the uprisings across the Middle East and amidst powerful protest movements around the world, communication has never been more critical to governments and companies.
- At a time when any citizen can be a journalist and everyone can voice their opinion – in real time, making an impact across the globe – how should organizations engage with their stakeholders? What are the best practices for communications professionals in this age of dialogue?
- Participants in the Congress, will address these important questions through keynote speeches and interactive panel discussions.

Sub Theme 1

The Changing Political Landscape: What's Next?

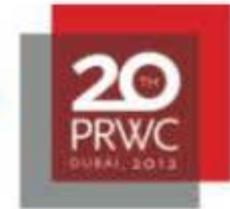

المؤتمر العالمي
للمهاتفة العامة
Public Relations
World Congress
www.prwcDubai.com

- TIME surely got it right when they named the 2011 person of the year “The Protester.” What started with one disgruntled fruit vendor in rural Tunisia became a mass movement that continues to reshape the course of history. None of this would have been possible, however, without the instant connectivity offered by social media like Twitter and Facebook.
- Empowered by new technology and spurred by the impact of the global financial crisis, these movements could continue to alter the global political landscape – leading to greater transparency and increased accountability. In the meantime, governments and businesses need to understand these movements, gauge their impact and engage them in dialogue.

The Future of the Media: The End of the Newsroom?

- Just as social media has empowered new protest movements, so has it proved a game changer for the traditional press. In the age of the citizen journalist, the traditional media is less relevant – and less trusted – than ever before, reaching ever-narrower audiences and frequently substituting opinion for in-depth reporting of facts on the ground. The plague hacking controversy and the ongoing enquiry in the UK has further affected trust in the media.
- Worldwide, mainstream media continue to grapple with these rapidly evolving conditions that threaten the sustainability of their business model and could jeopardize the future of the newsroom as we know it.

Next Practices in Public Relations: Communications in 2022

- The communications industry has changed dramatically in the last decade – but it has often followed trends pioneered by technology companies and then by media. The industry needs to invest in identifying next practices in communication, so that we don't just follow trends, but lead them.
- The future of Public Relations will not just be defined by how we communicate but by the substance of what we have to say. Thinking ahead to the next decade, what role can and should PR professionals play in shaping dialogue in 2022?
